Rethinking Social Problems: Social and Solidarity Economy's Genesis

The social and solidarity sector has known a boom in the last 10 years both in Tunisia and internationally. Creating solutions around social problems has gradually become possible in a structured way that doesn't depend on individual efforts but that can involve communities and institutions.

At a local level, the political context of the 2011 revolution has led to the emergence of many players, coming together with the aim to tackle social, environmental, and cultural challenges, through small-scale initiatives.

Organizations were then created and programs have been designed to create and support the evolving social and solidarity sector. Diverse types of structures have been established to reinforce local ecosystems all around the country and a ripple effect has echoed all over to replicate initiatives that can make impactful changes a reality. The local synergies have laid the foundation for fruitful collaborations on the regional level. Local ecosystems of different countries came together to collaborate on regional projects, for a wider impact and sustainable change.

Change is a big word that goes beyond extravagant promises. It involves criticizing reality and reflecting on collective learnings that can help people, social actors, ecosystems, communities, and countries to develop. Thus, we invite you to be an active participant in this reflection!

Reflecting on the Past, Capitalizing on Change, and Envisioning the Future

The Future of Social and Solidarity Economy Conference seeks to offer a space to reflect on the sector's achievements in the last decade and to envision practices and approaches that can reinforce the social innovation ecosystems both nationally and internationally.

Reflecting on the Past, Capitalizing on Change, and Envisioning the Future

The Future of Social and Solidarity Economy Conference seeks to offer a space to reflect on the sector's achievements in the last decade and to envision practices and approaches that can reinforce the social innovation ecosystems both nationally and internationally.

Within this framework, Tunisian social and solidarity economy players will come together to identify the key learnings and best practices, while imagining a roadmap for where we want to go as social innovators, social entrepreneurs, and change-makers.

The Future of Social and Solidarity Economy Conference is an open invitation to local partners to meet and connect, with the aim of creating a collaborative environment that best supports the local ecosystem. In addition to local attendees, the conference will welcome international partners coming from Jordan, Palestine, Greece, Spain, and Portugal.

Adding to the panels and networking sessions, the conference's program will also host presentations of projects' key findings and open horizons for new ones such as:

- 'MedUP, Promoting Social Entrepreneurship in the Mediterranean Area', co-funded by the European Union.
- 'MedRiSSE, Replicable Innovations of SSE in the Provision of Services & Creation of Decent Jobs in the Post Covid-19 Crisis Recovery', co-funded by ENI CBC MED.

Participants can enjoy the morning coffee break while networking!

11.30 - 13.00

Workshop : Our collective learnings!, Facilitated by Future Islands

Coproduction of public policies, access to finance, and SSE sector development

This workshop will follow a practical approach, where participants will be invited to join workshops and dig deeper around themes such as access to finance for social entrepreneurs, the co-production of public policies and the development of the social and solidarity economy sector. The workshop will start with an ice breaking exercise to get the room's energy moving. Participants will afterwards be guided to their assigned tables where they will be part of an hour-long in depth conversation about the subject of their choice and they will contribute to an expert lead exchange that seeks to set the tone for a better future for the SSE sector. In order to do so, the workshops will focus on these key issues:

- The access to finance workshop will vulgarize financial products and question the existing offer by financial institutions in order to adapt it to the needs of social entrepreneurs. Facilitators: Mohamed Daly Sfia, Ahmed Ben Nejma, Oumaima Jegham.

- The benchmarking co-production workshop will investigate different experiences in the Mediterranean region on co-producing social services. Facilitator: Zied Boussen.
- The public policy workshop will guide participants into the concrete steps to establish a successful participatory process in coproducing policies, in the Tunisian context. Facilitator: Saber Louhichi.
- The Social and solidarity economy development workshop will question the current needs of social entrepreneurs and how actors can collaborate more effectively in order to meet these needs. Facilitator: Pedro Telleria.

13.00- 14.30

Lunch Break

Participants are welcome to take a break, mingle and have some lunch!

14.30 – 18.00

Common vision for the Future: Creating Future Visions for the SSE, Facilitated by New Silk Roads

Envisioning the future that we want to thrive in.

This workshop seeks to investigate the futures that participants want to live in. They will come together to boldly imagine the future of the social economy in the Mediterranean region. Over two working sessions, a diverse array of social economy actors (international partners, local partners, entrepreneurs, potential entrepreneurs, changemakers, etc) will work in small groups to articulate their preferred future visions as rooted in local values, needs, and priorities. Using examples from history, art, literature and science, this session will provide participants with the initial tools and mindset of a “futures thinker.” Through identifying assumptions about the future, and the narratives which we create around these assumptions, the facilitators will work with participants to articulate preferred futures and imagine beyond futures thinking tropes, such as utopia, dystopia, or techno-optimism. This session will also present strategies for how participants may think more creatively and optimistically about their roles in constructing the future, starting now in the present.

18.00 – 18.30

Closing session

Moderator: Ms. Leila Ben Gacem

Speakers: Ms. Georgia Karavangeli (Asamblea de Cooperación Por la Paz), Mr. Lotfi Ben Aissa, (Municipality of Tunis)

The closing session will address the foundations of the conference and open horizons for the future of the SEE sector based on the actors' input during the workshops.
